

AIA Elite Conservative Fund

March 2025

Investment Objective

The ILP Sub-Fund seeks long-term total return (combination of capital growth and income) and at the same time minimize short term capital risk by investing in a portfolio of equities and fixed income securities. The ILP Sub-Fund's expected average direct and indirect exposure to equities will be approximately 30% over the long-term, however this exposure may vary from time to time. The other 70% will be invested in fixed income or money market instruments.

Macro Review

The US labor market continued to create jobs in March 2025 and unemployment rate crept up slightly from the previous month. The US manufacturing sector fell into contractionary territory in March 2025 after starting the first 2 months of 2025 in expansionary territory. The US Services sector remained in expansionary territory in March 2025. Citi's Economic Surprise Index continued to be in negative territory in March 2025. US inflation for March 2025 remained positive albeit lower than the reading in the first 2 months of 2025.

In March 2025, the Eurozone manufacturing continued to stay sluggish in contractionary territory. Eurozone manufacturing has been in contractionary territory for more than 2 years. In contrast, Eurozone Services PMI was in expansionary territory in March 2025 for the fourth consecutive month. Citi's Economic Surprise Index for Eurozone declined in March 2025 but still ended the month in positive territory. Eurozone inflation continued to be positive in March 2025, though dipped slightly from the reading in February 2025.

In March 2025, China's manufacturing sector continued to expand as the China manufacturing PMI was in expansionary territory for the second consecutive month. China's non-manufacturing PMI was also in expansionary territory in March 2025. Both China consumer price inflation and producer price inflation were negative in March 2025. Citi's Economic Surprise Index for China rebounded and ended March 2024 in positive territory.

Market Review

Global equities dipped again in March 2025 for the second consecutive month and ended 1Q 2025 in negative territory. For the month ending March 2025, Energy, Utilities, and Materials led while Information Technology, Consumer Discretionary and Communication Services lagged. For March 2025, in terms of investment styles, Minimum Volatility outperformed Growth significantly. For March 2025, across the major geographic regions in USD terms, India equities led, while US equities lagged.

The fixed income markets were mixed in March 2025. US Treasuries were up while US Investment Grade and High Yield indices were down in March 2025. US 10-year yield dipped for the third consecutive month in March 2025. High yield and investment grade credit spreads widened in March 2025, with high yield credit spread expanding significantly more than investment grade credit spread.

The commodities markets were up in March 2025. Gold, Oil and Copper were up in March 2025. The US Dollar depreciated against both DM currencies and Asia currencies in March 2025.

Portfolio Review

Elite Conservative Fund (SGD) / (USD):

- The fund delivered negative SGD / USD returns, underperforming its benchmark for the month of March 2025. For the month, there was some equity market volatility around month-end closing prices.
- In terms of currency movements, USD depreciated against the SGD for the month
- In terms of performance attribution for the month, both asset allocation and security selection detracted. Within security selection, the main detractors were AIA Global Select Equity Fund and AIA Diversified Fixed Income Fund. Within asset allocation, the main detractors were Fixed Income and Cash (inclusive of fees and expenses).

Outlook

Risk assets experienced a sharp sell-off since Liberation Day as the tariffs announcements from the US administration were worse than expected. Equities across geographic regions sold off, credit spreads widened significantly, and commodities fell sharply.

Markets could remain volatile as market participants are assessing whether a new world order has been established, where the previous regime of globalization and free trade has been abruptly displaced by a regime where countries erect trade barriers and protectionism takes precedence.

It is a challenging environment to have conviction in forecasts as uncertainty emanates from 2 sources: First, uncertainty whether the tariffs imposed by US are here to stay & the US administration's policy stance; Second, uncertainty on how the other countries would respond.

Over the short term, we remain vigilant and stay on the sidelines. This is because going into the sharp sell-off, risk taking of the Elite Funds has already been brought down and our assessment is that technical conditions remain challenged, sentiment remain depressed and thus volatility is likely to remain elevated.

Notwithstanding the short-term focus on downside risk management, taking a medium-term perspective, growth conditions were benign prior to Liberation Day with Global PMI signalling steady trend-like growth, and 2025 US earnings forecast in double digits. Supportive growth conditions provide a buffer for the global economy to respond to shocks such as the increased tariffs. Equities are arguably on sale at the point of writing and the investment team is actively looking for better entry points. A rebound in risk assets could be catalysed by policy response as past stress episodes typically see policy makers inject liquidity into the financial system. The key is to stick to a disciplined investment process, carefully weigh medium term upsides returns versus downside risks and not be whipsawed by the volatile market environment.
