Manager's Commentary

(As of 30 November 2022)

SMART 70 registered positive returns over the month of November, with both equities and bonds contributing to performance. Within equities, our preference for Asia and China was beneficial with the underlying holdings delivering strong double-digit returns. Fixed income was also positive, led by our credit exposures.

The Fund underperformed its reference benchmark attributed largely to an underperformance in the underlying US equity strategy, which was hurt by negative stock selections in Healthcare, Industrials and Finance.

Asset allocation was positive due largely to our preference for credit while our long 30-year US treasury futures also added value. Within equities, a tactical overweight in Japan and Asia (notably China) contributed positively to relative performance. The decision to reduce an overweight position in Cash and USD also helped mitigate relative losses
